Flowering Plant in a Pot

This annual Impatiens was part of an outdoor planter that I brought indoors. It rebloomed around Christmas and keeps going!

Phalenopsis x Doritaenopsis

Flowering Plant in a Pot

This wee Cactus blooms both profusely and reliably three times a year, covering the major religions' various holidays. It's one of our dear Alice C's from a few years ago.

This florist Kalachoe was separated from a planter, repotted and placed in a south facing window to bloom a second time!

Crown of Thorns - A gift from a friend

Last summer during a torrential downpour, two Sunnybrook employees out for a noon-hour walk took shelter on our porch. They had to get back to work, so we fitted them out in whatever we could find - a couple of black garbage bags for her, and a Maid of the Mist poncho for him - and off they went. Two weeks later they appeared with this Anthurium as a thank you, and it has bloomed ever since!

Asparagus Plumosa Fern
(Asparagus setaceus)

It's been cut back many times, but it has always rebounded. If it dries out, the fronds turn brown very quickly. It's now in a cache pot with stones in the bottom and I try to keep it wet at all times.

Bought this Dieffenbachia over a year ago at a pop-up LGS sale. It thrives in shade!

Took two slips from a magnificent Coleus last fall and now I have two pots ready for outdoor planting this spring.

Foliage Plant in a Pot

This Pilea peperomioides was given to me nearly a year ago as a tiny specimen - similar in size to the small plant in the photo. The smaller plant is a clone from a root offshoot, of which there are many. The ease of propagation leads people to share this plant and thus, one of its common names is "Friendship Plant". It is also known as "Chinese Money Plant" or "Pancake Plant".

Pilea peperomioides is native to southern China and was not well-known until the mid '80s; and not widely commercially available until 10-15 years ago. It is a member of the Nettle family and endangered in its native habitat.

Wild and Wonderful

Davallia (Rabbit's Foot Fern)
Its rabbit's foot "roots" surrounded the plant stand years ago so the pot cannot be removed from it!

Wild and Wonderful

This Helebre has been blooming most of the winter and still going – photo from mid February
(Yes, I know its not a house plant!)

Note the strange off shoots - Corn Plant's interesting way of propagating .
